

HARVARD INTERNATIONAL LAW JOURNAL .

HILJ Volume 60: FRONTIERS – Call for Print Submissions

The Harvard International Law Journal is now accepting article submissions for Volume 60. The Journal seeks to publish innovative, original scholarship that makes a significant contribution to the field of international law. We welcome submissions from legal scholars, practitioners, and doctoral degree candidates on topics of private or public international law and related fields, including interdisciplinary work. (For information about student submissions, visit our website.) Please note that we do not generally publish articles on foreign or comparative law unless they significantly engage with issues of international law.

For our 60th Anniversary volume, as we reflect on our past and look forward, the Journal is particularly interested in publishing articles about the frontiers of international law. Frontiers represent new horizons and new perspectives; but, they can also reveal limits, gaps, and boundaries. We intend the broad line of inquiry for this issue to include emerging issues in international law, interactions between existing bodies of international law, limits of international law, the influence of new technologies or scientific understandings on international law, and interdisciplinary perspectives on international law and governance.

Submissions Requirements:

We prefer submissions of between 15,000 and 25,000 words, including footnotes, though we may accept articles of up to 30,000 words. All articles should be double-spaced and in English. Manuscripts must be submitted online via ExpressO. In addition to the article, please include an abstract, a CV with a list of recent publications, and current contact information. Footnotes should conform with The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation (20th Ed.).

Submissions Process:

Articles will be reviewed on a rolling basis by a Submissions Committee comprised of J.D. and LL.M./S.J.D candidates, and may also be reviewed by our faculty advisors and/or scholars in our peer network. If short-listed, the article will be sent to the HILJ Executive Board for a final decision. We endeavor to respond to authors within a month of receiving a submission, but we are unfortunately unable to provide feedback for articles that are not selected.

Once an article has been selected, the Editors-in-Chief will contact the author with a contract and further information on the publication process. The HILJ editorial process is a rigorous one, and authors should expect to work closely with Journal staff on substantial substantive and technical revisions prior to the article's final publication.
